The aim of this study was to test whether autoimmune pathways are involved in the development of diabetic nephropathy (DN). DN is the most frequent complication in diabetes and is strongly associated with cardiovascular morbidity. Sialic acid, one of the most abundant unbranched carbohydrates, is a common post-translational modification found on cellular surfaces and in the extracellular matrix. The reduction of sialic acid may impair the maturation of immune cells that results in a breakdown of immune tolerance and a release of autoantigens. We studied a population of 66 patients with biopsy-proven DN and correlated their clinical data with the presence of anti- sialic acid IgG in their sera. Anti- sialic acid IgG was detected in the sera of 16 out of 66 patients with DN (24.2%) and was more frequently associated with proteinuria, duration of diabetes and type of therapy (insulin, oral hypoglycemic agents and diuretic drugs). Furthermore, anti- sialic acid IgG was significantly associated with the presence of autoantibodies against mannose-binding lectin (anti-MBL IgG) and with a low CD35 expression by neutrophils (p Q: Traverse back up directories in a batch file, preserve
